The Color From the Dark... It Sucks Your Life Out...

From the imagination of H.P. Lovecraft, and the visionary horror director Ivan Zucco comes a new tale of cinematic terror...

It's the 1940's, and World War II is raging. Pietro and Lucia live on an isolated farm with Alice, Lucia's younger sister. Alice is a 23 year old who suffers from severe mental problems. They live their simple lives tilling the soil as poor farmers. Pietro is a good worker and a strong man, who unlike his three brothers, is not at war because of a deformed knee. Lucia is a beautiful and reserved woman dedicated to her family. Their life is peaceful and good, in spite of the hard work and isolation. One day, while drawing water from the well, Pietro and Alice stir something at the bottom, at first an apparently insignificant event, which frees something from Earth's womb. A strange and alien color flashes underwater, at the well's bottom, then disappears. From that moment on, inexplicable events start happening all around the farm, and by night, the surrounding vegetation glitters with a sinister glow. The color soon takes a hold of the entire farm, and seeps inside Pietro and his family's minds, drawing them into its sick world of pain, blood and death...

At the tender age of eight Marcel is abandoned by his mother. He is raised by his grandfather, Pascual, who introduces him to a world of fantasy and gives him the love and care that his mother couldn't. When Marcel turns twenty-one, he believes the time has come to live on his own. He's got plans with his girlfriend and feels ready to leave his home. At the same time, Pascual has become very old, and starts showing the symptoms of a disease that will dramatically affect Marcel's plans. He must choose to leave or stay to take care of the only relative that ever loved him and cared for him. The choice is far from simple, between his grandfather and his love, in this critically acclaimed, tender, coming-of-age story from the crossroads of desire, devotion and love.

May Story

A film by Gwang-Man, Park

A Cinematic Tale Of Love, Violence And History

Beautiful, young Soonji meets Jaegu at a re-enactment of a South Korean historic event, their attraction and participation mirrors the love story of her parents twenty-five years earlier...

Will Love Repeat itself? Will Violence repeat itself?

It is May 2008. The South Korean city of Gwangju, will commemorate the May 18th 1980 uprising in style. They will stage a grand reenactment of the scenes of the May uprising 25 years earlier, when martial law troops killed civilians, including women and children, who were simply exercising their democratic right to assemble and protest, in the early days of the South Korean democracy. The May 1980 has ever since been a dark stain on South Korean history. For the re-enactment, two groups of Gwangju citizens will play the roles of Citizen Army on the one hand, and of the Martial-law troops on the other, and confront each other in the square in front of the provincial government's civic center.

The movie begins with stark documentary footage dealing with the actual event. Gradually, the story of Soonji and Jaegu during the re-enactment takes hold. Before long, the historic facts and fiction run against each other, as Soonji remembers her parent's plight of earlier times. As the reenactment groups collide, so do the facts of Soonji's life and the fiction she is now engaged in, until she can no long separate fact from fiction. A poetic, high production value coming of age film set against the backdrop of history.

A former model Stephanie (Melissa Leo, 2009 Academy Award™ Best Actress Nominee), is found murdered in her San Francisco apartment. Her boyfriend, Richard (Chris Butler), whose body is also found at the scene, apparently killed her and then committed suicide. A photographer (Janis DeLucia Allen) who worked closely with Stephanie, decides to make a documentary about her life, as a kind of a memorial. She interviews those people closest to Stephanie, but she soon discovers that almost everything she has been told about the crime is false and everyone she interviews is lying. The circumstances surrounding Stephanie's death become more and more contradictory and as the filmmaker struggles for the truth she also realizes she may have played a frightening part in what happened to her friend. A subtle mystery drama featuring a powerful cast lead by Academy Award™ nominee Melissa Leo.
